Pacific DanceArts
Coastal City Ballet

Understanding the Risk

A communicable disease is an illness caused by an infectious agent or its toxic product that can be transmitted in a workplace from person to person. Examples of communicable diseases that may circulate in a workplace include COVID-19, norovirus, and seasonal influenza.

The risk of communicable disease depends on the amount of virus circulating in the community, which changes from place to place and over time. Community transmission is monitored by public health authorities in British Columbia.

Management of Staff/Students with Possible Symptoms

To prevent transmission, if a student/child or staff member who is self-monitoring begins to experience symptoms of a communicable disease while attending the studio, it is recommended that:

- Staff will promptly separate students/staff who show symptoms from others until they can go home.
- Hand hygiene and respiratory etiquette are practiced while the ill person is waiting to be picked up or leave. Tissues will be provided for the student to ensure their use with respiratory etiquette. Proper disposal of the tissue and hand hygiene will be performed after coughing or sneezing. Environmental cleaning of the space the student was separated too will be conducted once they have been picked or left.
